It is my considered opinion that the proposed rules to profile airplane passengers in order to ascertain if they meet some sort of "terroist profile" is utterly ridiculous and flys in the face of even basic constitutional tenents.

This is an obscene attempt to further deprive americans of certain privacy rights for very specious gains. Little by little, increment by increment americans are loosing privacy to government agencies and law enforcement for reasons that benefit only bureaucrats who would like nothing better than to know everything about everybody all the time in order to preserve 'law and order'. Well that end might be achieved but at that end what is left---certainly not a self-governing republic. We will have achieved a well ordered, peaceful, and subdued police-state.

Caps as proposed by the FAA will only further this end.
